DNHAPPY MATRIMONY.

Duncan T. Templeton Shoots His Wife in Eighth Avenue.

The Wounded Woman a Baughter of President Grant's Private Secretary.

TIMERING BETWEEN LIFE AND DEATH.

Another of those unfortanate occurrences which mearth family skeletons, and drag from the secluon of a limited circle of friends and acquintances he real or imagined grievances under which two parties under the matrimonial yoke have long suffered, occurred yesterday morning on Eighth avenue, near Fourteenth street. When a cobbler assaults his wife with his thee knife or an exasperated mason stabs the partner of his unhappiness with a trowel, the comnunity shudders, mentally recalls some trite temerance maxim, and, after declaring its verdict gainst the poor wretch who committed he deed, and who may be the most deserving of pity, dismisses the subject from its thoughts. The metropolitan community, made up of a wondrous variety of elements, relishes ed gloats over anything which offers to its intelsotual palste the slightest semblance of scandal or A somerset thrown in the public lighway by the most skilled acrobat does not attract any notice, while a fashionable murder, comnitted in the privacy of a hotel room, fills the same populace with a morbid human interest.

The city was yesterday treated to one of the nost characteristic and sensational shootings. which failed of murder from no good intention of the principal actor in the affair. The picture of a man shooting another man, then surrendering mself and walking off triumphantly with the solice officer, who, apparently out of courtesy, companied him to the station house, had been oroughly familiarized in connection with the Stokes and King assaults. They were characteristic shootings of the "Don't-care-a-damn" order. Here we have a change—a man with all the neceseary bravado, so requisite in a murder of this school, assaults on the public thoroughtare, not genteel ruffan or an unoffensive stranger, but a adv and that lady his wife. When the police interfere he draws a pistol from that mysterious hip pocket and shoots his wife through the neck, inflicting wounds which may prove mortal. Such is the type of would-be murder which is served up this unday morning.

THE DETAILS OF THE CRIME. Duncan T. Templeton about three years ago married, in opposition to the expressed wish of the lady's parents, Miss Ida Babcock, daugnter of General Babcock, the private secretary of the President. The young bride was scarcely 16, and encountered the matrimonial future with some ideas which do not appear to have coincided with those of the man whom she had promised to honor and copy. The marriage was not a happy one, and after much suffering, and, it is asserted, some privation and ill treatment, a separation took place. This was several months since. Mrs. Templeton took board at Mrs. H. W. Kenney's, No. 238 West Fourteenth street, near Eignth avenne. Templeton, whose life has been rather irregular for more than a year, took up his lodgings at No. 48 on the same street. The young which had resided at her new home only a few days before she was called upon by her husband, and upon her declining to return to his home she was threatened with violence. Some of the persons in the house even assert that they have heard Templeton threaten to take his whie's life. These calls have been more or less frequent ever since Mrs. Templeton was in the house, and so vexatious had they become that she refused to see or speak with her recreant husband. It has been very seldom that the lady has ventured out of the house.

On yesterday morning, about ten o'clock, Mrs. Templeton was not on Eighth avenue, only a few steps from her home, when she was accosted by Duncan T. Templeton, and, upon refusing to again to take up her abode with him, she was sized by the wrists. Her screams brought a policeman, who arrested Templeton. As the prisoner was being conveyed to the station house he suddenly turned round, drew and fired a pistol at his wife. The shot took effect in her neck, passing through and loiging in the sposite cneek. The prisoner was locked up; the wounded woman was taken to her home. Such, briefly, are the facts of the last shoeting affair. There are two stories about the events immediately preceding the shooting, but the reporter has accepted that which comes from the police.

The line which divides the Ninth and Sixteenth wards, as well as the Ninth and Sixteenth police precincts, runs through Fourteenth street. The house in which Mrs. Templeton was residing is located on the south side of Fourteenth stre which do not appear to have coincided with those of the man whom she had promised to honor sn Eighth avenue, between Fourteenth and Pit-teenth streets, and as a consequence the prisoner was conveyed to the Sixteenth precinct station bouse, on Twentieth street, near Eighth avenue. Officer Gallagher, who made the arrest, gives the following statement of what he saw of the shoot-

lag:—
Iwas attracted by a woman's cry on the east side of Eighth avenue, near Fourteenth street. Sho was calling "Police! police!" I at once rashed to the spot and found a young woman struggling with a man. Both were well dressed and had the appearance of respectability. There were one or two other ladies mear at hand, who appeared to have been in company with the young lady who was held by the man. I at once took hold of the man and, telling the lady to consider herself under arrest and to accompany me, I started toward the station house with my prisoner. The man released his held upon the young lady and, although terribly excited, appeared to submit quietly. We, that is the prisoner and I, started up Eighth avenue and the lady was preparing to follow. We had only taken a lew steps, however, when the prisoner, with the rapidity of thought, before I could either guess his intention or interfere, drew a small pistol from his hip pocket, and, whirling around, fired at the lady. It was all done in much less time than it requires for me to tell you. The lady staggered, and I leit sure that she had been hit. I did not lose an instant, but disarined the would-be murderer and hastled him along to the station house. The lady was at once cared for by other officers who had arrived, and I believe was conveyed directly to her hame."

The Captain Cherry of the Sixteenth precipet makes I was attracted by a woman's cry on the east was at once cared for by other officers who had arvived, and I believe was conveyed directly to her hanne."

The CAPTAIN'S STATEMENT.

Captain Cherry, of the Sixteenth precinct, makes the following statement of the conduct of the prisoner, Duncan T. Templeton:—"I never saw the man before to my knowledge. When he was brought in by Officer Galiagher he was only slightly fushed and nervous. He appeared atterly indifferent regarding the result of the shooting. He submitted to the searching of his sclothes and said very little for a while. After the sunal formula was gone through with—taking his name, address and age—he said to make that his wife had left him and sthat he had repeatedly asked her to return, had that she would not do so. He had appeatedly called to see her, he said, at No. 238 West Fourteenth street, but she had either denied it him an audience, or, if she had seen him, rejected at his offers. He made general charges against the character of the house, which, he claimed, madered the place an improper one for his wet to remain in. He asserted that he had determ, bed to have her despite all opposition. Further that it his he did not offer any justification. He reass, which that his wife had gone to be an inhabitant for a house of bad character, and that he never coult stand such a proceeding. He industriously avoit we saying anything about the shooting."

"We this assertion regarding the house a mere slande to or is there any foundation for his statement! asked the reporter.

"As you know, the house is in the Ninth precinct, and I do not, therefore, know much about the premise: But from experience I am convinced by what I saw that the story is only a base a mader upon both the family and the ledy herse k. It is, I should judge, a respectability. I did not see Laything to justify even a suspicion against the character of the house."

The Prissoner.

Duncan T. Templeton states that he resides at did not see snything to justify even a suspicion against the (Baffacter of the house."

THE PHISONER.

Duncan T. (Templeton states that he resides at No. 48 West Fourteenth street, and that he is 32 years of age. He is of moderate height and carries himsell with an affected gravity. He was well dressed when captured, and even when committing a most cowardly assault upon a delenceless worken assumed to stand on the dignity of a gentlemen. Nothing could be learned of the prisoner's previous life at his boarding house.

Mrs. Ma Babcock Templeton is very small and light in haure. She certainly possesses great personal coun age, for although she was suffering intense agointy all yesterday afternoon she did not manifest it by any cries of pain. To use the words of an enthus, astic detective officer, "she bore it like a little hero." The ball entered the throat just forward of the main artery, crossed through the mouth, breaking, the under jaw on the left side and the upper jaw on the right, and lodged in the deshy part of the right, and lodged where it still remains. The wound is a phastly one, and he hemorrhage has been very profuse. The sufferer was very weak from the loss of shood, but the shock he legryous gratem does not appear to be very great. The young lady's mother arrived in the alternoon and was by the bedside of her suffering child. She did not, waste any time in tears or lamentations: but, like the wife of a soldier, at once took charge of the attendants and ministered to every want of the sufferer. Regarding the story of her daughter's wrongs she did not speak, evidently believing that her path of duty was in the sufferer's inving that her path of duty was in the sufferer's room.

THE SUPPERER'S ROOM.

A HERALD reporter called at No. 238 West Fourteenth street. The house was perfectly quiet, and there were no evidences of the attempted homicide perceptible either in the shape of a curious throng in the street or in a crowded hallway full of servingmands and doctors' nurses within. The door was opened by a daughter of the lady of the house. Captain Cherry arrived at this instant, and after him the reporter entered the hall. The house was well but plainly furnished. The wounded lady was in the back parlor lying on a bed which was placed in the middle of the room. The usual throng of assistants did not surround the bed. Neither the captain of police nor the reporter entered the room. At the bedside sat Mrs. Babcock, thelady's mother, and Doctor Foot was in attendante.

The hirstican's statement.

The attendant physician was called into the hall, and away from the sight of the patient interrogated as to the condition of the wounded woman. In addition to the description of the wounded woman in addition to the description of the wound given above he said:—

"All immediate danger is past. The lady has recovered from the shock in a wonderful manner. She is perfectly conscious, although unable to speak. The bleeding has been stopped, and her greatest physician for the next few days will be quiet and rest. The ball is yet in her face; it can be distinctly felt on the right side, but its extraction at present would be very dangerous and the chances are ninety-nine out of the hundred that the pan would be so excessive as to prove fatal to her life. It is certain, I say, that present danger is past. The crists will come on or about the third day, when suppuration will begin. If the ball had gone the thekness of this card of yours further back the artery would have been broken and death would have ensued at once. The danger then arises from the fact that the wound is located so close to the artery burst there could not be anything done to save life is safe."

A visit from the coroner.

Captain Cherry at once telegraphed to Police Headquarters, and Coroner Keenan proceeded early in the alternoon to No. 238 West Fourteenth street to take the ante-mortem statement of Mrs. Ida Templeton. Learning, upon visiting the house, that the wounded lady was not in immediate danger of death, the Coroner did not proceed to take her statement, insamuch as it would have no binding lorce unless she considered herself to be in a dying condition. In case the condition of the patient should change for the worse her statement will be taken.

A Herald reporter called at the residence of Mrs. Templeton late last night and learned that her condition was unchanged and that hope was growing with every hour.

WASHINGTON.
